This workshop will help undergraduate students develop the skills to be successful presenting in academic contexts. This is a crucial skill to help students prepare for and succeed in graduate school. We will cover the research process briefly and focus on how to organize a tight academic presentation and get others excited about the insights you have to offer. No research or presenting experience is required and this session can be helpful to all students. If you’re nervous about the idea of presenting in front of others (even when you care about the topic), you should definitely come!

Light refreshments will be provided
