Experience China’s rural roots while providing valuable community service to Fengyan, a small village outside of Guilin, China. As China continues to develop, migrant workers flock to the coastal cities to seek higher paying jobs, leaving small villages like Fengyan where grandparents are tasked with caring for the children of these migrant workers. These children are known as “the left behind children”, where psychological issues arise from not having a stable parental presence. On this program you will participate in a Chinese non-profit organization’s summer school for the children of Fengyan village to teach English, art, music and sports.
