These renderings demonstrate the curtain’s thermal effects. During the winter solstice, the sun penetrates through the openings of the curtain allowing for more warmth and sunlight. During the summer solstice, less sunlight passes through allowing the room to stay cool.

These perspective views show the scale of the curtain in proportion to a person. With the shade that the curtain provides, the level of privacy is kept within the interior of the room, but still allows subtle views to the outside.