Personal Commentary (please limit comments to one page):

was raised in Fayetteville, Arkansas, by two university professors. For Antioch College's "co-op" jobs I worked at a New York hospital, an Ohio newspaper, Unesco in Paris, and community development and archeology projects in Greece. Before starting graduate work at Stanford, I worked at an archeological site in Germany. My strong interest in Europe led me to the study of Renaissance history and dissertation research in Paris (1968-69). I continued my study and research in Europe on many sabbaticals, with many séjours in Paris and two years in Florence. I acquired a small Tuscan hideaway which we visit regularly. In addition to renewed activity as an amateur radio operator, I enjoy San Francisco and its ethnic cuisines, as well as stimulating travel abroad (in recent years I have visited France, Spain, Greece, Bhutan, Singapore, Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, and Iran).
