

ESSAY 2: VISUAL NETWORKS

Writing Exercise 2

Due: Thurs, 10/4

Reading: "Educating by Design" (697-706)
"Reality TV Meets Plastic Surgery" (229-231)

Your second exercise in this essay is to make use of the art object in a scene, a scene that will put you and the object in some sort of relationship with one another, similar to the objects used in the readings for Thursday (e.g., the combination of plastic surgery and reality television create a scene that is watched by many). We'll come back to this scene to discover what was left out, what was interpreted and what culture represents here (personal as that may be).

A scene is not a report of an event (rendered as if you were a journalist charged with merely reporting who, what, when, where) or a narrative account (that merely tells what happened in the order of its occurrence). A scene is dramatic; it is constructed so that, as viewers or as an audience, we experience the action as if we are in the scene ourselves. We are drawn into it by language, drama, perhaps the characters' conversation. Your scene need not focus on your relationship to the art object; the object should simply play some part in the scene – dramatic or otherwise.

Your second exercise in this essay is to make use of the art object in a scene, a scene that will put you and the object in some sort of relationship with one another, similar to the objects used in the readings for Thursday (e.g., the combination of plastic surgery and reality television create a scene that is watched by many). We'll come back to this scene to discover what was left out, what was interpreted and what culture represents here (personal as that may be).

A scene is not a report of an event (rendered as if you were a journalist charged with merely reporting who, what, when, where) or a narrative account (that merely tells what happened in the order of its occurrence). A scene is dramatic; it is constructed so that, as viewers or as an audience, we experience the action as if we are in the scene ourselves. We are drawn into it by language, drama, perhaps the characters' conversation. Your scene need not focus on your relationship to the art object; the object should simply play some part in the scene – dramatic or otherwise.
