Photographer, artist and organizer, Jesús Garza’s artistic vision was shaped by his boyhood in San José, California and nurtured at Roosevelt Junior High, San José High, San José State University, the San Francisco Art Institute and the Academy of Art College. Garza has been taking photographs since he was 11 years old. He currently exhibits and lectures about his photographs and is an instructor at the local university.

Garza entered San José State University in the fall of 1970 (’78 BA Journalism). There he studied Photojournalism under Dr. Joe Swan and participated in the progressive causes of the time including anti-war demonstrations and protests that sought increased access for Chicana/os to education and media.
