Course Description

From the catalog: Modes and skills of practical logic and reasoning through study of historical method. Historical problems examined to that end.

History 50 is a seminar course in critical thinking. A common definition of critical thinking is autonomous thinking without the tether of irrational beliefs or unjustified authorities. This is a skill for the thinking mind, and as such should be learned as a skill. You will be able to evaluate more effectively what you read in print or electronically on the Internet, see on video, hear on audio as well as what you are told about the past, present and future. There are several avenues to learn and exercise this skill. This course emphasizes historical methodology, or process. Through the study of historical cases, one can learn to examine historical problems and controversies critically, and grasp the process of reasoning through the analytical skills used by historians. We will do active learning by analyzing documents, selecting, weighing and balancing evidence, and coming to understand how historians do the detective work in understanding the past. Essentially, this course will make a skeptic out of you.

Course Requirements and Assignments

Central to the Historical Process course is the development and application of critical thinking techniques in speaking and writing. Thus, a portion of the grade will be based upon knowledge of different types of reasoning and the fallacies that mislead us. Emphasis will be placed on evidence of the student's ability to apply critical thinking techniques in speech (class discussion or student activities), actions (in-class exercises) and writing (essays or research papers).

With that in mind, the grading is separated into several parts to better address these several goals. Twenty percent of your grade will come from the fallacy exercises in which you will be able to recognize and analyze 33 different informal fallacies. This skill will be tested in the midterm, also worth twenty percent of the grade. Since we are applying this skill to history, some knowledge of historical terms and methods must be understood and this constitutes the quiz, worth five percent of the grade. The abilities of evaluation and reasoning are covered by various exercises conducted in class and requiring your participation. These in-class exercises (worth fifteen percent of your grade) include (but are not limited to): using artifacts, the outsiders game, a campus historical/investigative tour, a campus treasure hunt, and the use of personal photos in class, as well as other exercises in class.

The skills of evaluation, analysis and production with a reasoned argument make up the written assignments part of your grade (twenty percent value), with essays on (but not limited to) the Lexington Battle issue, the Shakespeare Authorship question, exploration of conspiracy theories including the Kennedy Assassination, the Tupac Shakur killing, and the events surrounding the 9/11 attacks. All of these critical thinking skills will be demonstrated with a final examination worth twenty percent of your total grade.

Besides discussions, writing is also an inherent part of this course. At least three written essays must be typewritten, double-spaced, and using a 12 point font size within reasonable margins. Use citation format that is required in your major, the History Department uses Turabian. These three papers should be about 7000 words collectively. Correct spelling and grammar is expected, in addition to a logical and convincing argument. The University General Education guidelines require the equivalent of at least 15 pages of written material, and some of this will be attained through the various assignments not listed under written assignments.

Success in this course is based on the expectation that students will spend, for each unit of credit, a minimum of 45 hours over the length of the course (normally three hours per unit per week) for instruction, preparation/studying, or course related activities, including but not limited to internships, labs, and clinical practica. Other course structures will have equivalent workload expectations as described in the syllabus.

Final Examination or Evaluation: This course has a final examination.

Grading Information and Determination of Grades

Fallacy Exercises	20%	60 pts.	GELOs 2-5 & CLO 1
Midterm Exam	20%	60 pts.	GELOs 2-5 & CLO 1
In-Class Exercises	15%	45 pts.	GELOs 1-5 & CLO 1
Quiz	5%	15 pts.	GELOs 2, 4-5
Written Assignments	20%	60 pts.	GELOs 1-5 & CLO 1
Final Exam	20%	60 pts.	GELOs 2-5 & CLO 1
Total	100%	300 pts.

An extra credit option is available after the midterm exam, and will be explained as we review for the midterm.

Please get the assignments in on the due date. This is important, as this is a once-a-week course, so late work becomes problematic if we are to review it the following week. Late work is deducted 10% in value for each week late.

Please do not send work by email and expect me to print it out. You need to print out your work, or hand-write in some circumstances, so that I can return the work with a grade on it, and you are left with tangible evidence of your work in the class.

Grading Information for GE/Basic Skills (A1, A2, A3, B4)

This course must be passed with a C- or better as a CSU graduation requirement.

Classroom Protocol

Come to class on time and prepared to participate in the class. Please do not interfere with other students' learning by chatting, noisily eating, taking calls, checking messages or texting. If you use a laptop in class, then stay off the websites and general internet unless directed by Professor Narveson to look something up.

Part of the course will revolve around discussions based upon assigned readings, as well as topics presented in class. Students should get into the habit of contributing questions, observations, and taking an active role in the class. My experience in teaching this course shows that students who participate in class learn faster and perform better on examinations. This is not a passive class.
