Scholarship open to Justice Studies undergraduate and graduate students each academic year.

Williard “Huck” Schmidt was a former faculty member and chair in the “The Police School” (Administration of Justice Department) in the Post War Era, 1946-1963.

The purpose of the police school was to provide professional training for the student with a definite interest in and adaptability to a police career. Although the specific nature of entrance to the school was modified somewhat during this period, background investigation, height, weight, and age were criteria utilized for admission.

Under Schmidt’s leadership, the Administration of Justice degree expanded to include a Penology Major in the Police School, designed to provide “professional training for the qualified student who had an interest in a career in rehabilitation, parole, and probation.”
