The San Jose Peace Center was founded in 1957 by individuals profoundly concerned about peace and justice issues, especially the proliferation of nuclear weapons. More than fifty years later, the Peace and Justice Center, along with our affiliated organizations, continues to educate and engage the South Bay community around critical issues of peace and justice, with a current focus on ending the wars, cutting the military budget, and funding human needs.

Justice Studies interns can assist with one or more of the following projects:

48south7th—the video program of the San Jose Peace & Justice Center and its community partner organizations, aimed at informing and educating the community on issues relating to peace and justice.

Wikipedia project—The Peace and Justice Center has a history of over 50 years, from the early campaigns against atmospheric testing of nuclear weapons to working to end the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq. Efforts are getting started to document this important history in a Wikipedia article.

Researching militarism in our community—Many South Bay companies have contracts with the U.S. military and with intelligence agencies. Investigating and documenting the extent to which local companies contribute to the military landscape in the South Bay is an ongoing project.

Participating in community campaigns—such as the South Bay International Women's Day Coalition, the Committee Against Political Repression, the S-Comm Coalition (?), and Silicon Valley Immigration Coalition.

The Peace & Justice Center Speakers Bureau—Help create a database of community organizations, clubs, high school and college classes where we can book speakers on topics related to peace and justice.
