COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course will focus on four broad categories of political thought. We begin with the relationship between individual citizens and the societies in which they live. Is there a fundamental conflict between being a good person and being a good citizen? Then we will examine political power. How should we deal with the darker side of politics – the violence and coercion that lies behind the state? Then we will turn to the subject of justice and equality. Would we really want societies that were perfectly equal? Finally, we will consider revolution and change in political life. How have reformers sought to justify greater equality in the human condition, especially for groups that have been deprived of equal social and political power?

PREREQUISITES

Students should be aware that this is a reading and writing intensive course. All students need some background in the critical reading of original texts. Political Science 3 offers an opportunity to develop the skills required in reading original sources. It is the suggested prerequisite for other theory courses offered in the department.

REQUIRED TEXT

Plato, The Trial and Death of Socrates/The Last Days of Socrates
Machiavelli, The Prince
Mill, On Liberty
Etienne de la Boétie, Discourse on Voluntary Servitude
More, Utopia
Rousseau, Basic Political Writings
Marx, Selected Political Writings

Students are required to check the website each week for specific reading assignments and additional handouts.

DEPARTMENTAL WRITING POLICY

Students of political science should develop the ability to write in clear, grammatical English. Spelling and grammar count! Students must take care that appropriate citations are used. Direct quotations must be so indicated with quotation marks and a specific reference to the page in the source from which it was taken. Failure to cite your sources constitutes academic misconduct which carries with it serious sanctions. A tutorial on citations is available at the library website at http://www.sjlibrary.org/services/literacy/info_comp/citing.htm.

For assistance, please visit the SJSU Writing Center staffed by professional instructors and upper-division or graduate-level writing specialists. Writing specialists have met a rigorous GPA requirement, and they are well trained to assist all students at all levels within all disciplines to become better writers. It is your responsibility to arrange a time to meet with the instructors. Consult with your professor in advance to determine whether you need assistance with your writing.

Arguably the best way to improve your own writing is to read quality material on a regular basis. To that end, students are encouraged to read articles from scholarly sources but also newspapers such as The Wall Street Journal, The Financial Times, The New York Times, and The Economist. These publications also contain articles of direct relevance to their political science classes.
