

Peter Lee Memorial International Lecture

Dr. Stephen J. Stedman

Former U.N. Assistant Secretary General
and Special Advisor to Kofi Annan,
Senior Fellow at the Center for International Security and Cooperation

Transforming American Foreign Policy: Can “Yes We Can” Overcome “No We Can’t”

“This is the world of transnational threats, where the actions—or inaction—of people and governments anywhere in the world can harm others thousands of miles away. It is a world where national security is interdependent with global security and where sovereign states acting alone are incapable of protecting their citizens. It is a world for which we are woefully unprepared.”

Stephen John Stedman is director of the Ford Dorsey Program in International Policy Studies at Stanford University, where he is also a senior fellow at the Center for International Security and Cooperation (CISAC) and Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies (FSI).

Professors: This lecture will give your students exposure to foreign policy thinking at the highest levels. Consider offering them extra credit or special credit for attendance.

Tuesday, November 17, 2009

Noon – 1:30 p.m.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Library, Room 225/229

San José State University, San José, California

Presented by International and Extended Studies

International Week: November 16 - 20, 2009