

Commonly Misused Words, Part I

Effect/Affect

- Effect is usually a noun meaning “a result or consequence.”
Example: The film had a profound effect on me.
- Affect is usually a verb meaning “to change or to influence.”
Example: The film affected my thoughts about the subject.
- When effect is used as a verb, it means “to bring about, or to make happen.”
Example: Global warming has effected a rise in the sea level.
- When affect is used as a noun, it is a psychological or psychiatric term meaning “a feeling or emotion.”
Example: “Restricted, flat, or blunted affect may be a symptom of mental illness, especially schizophrenia.”

Except/Accept

- Except is a preposition meaning “with the exclusion of, excluding.”
Example: I like all subjects except math.
- Accept is a verb with multiple meanings. It is usually used with an object and is most commonly used to mean “to receive, to take, to consent to, to respond to, etc.”
Examples:
I accepted the gift.
She accepted responsibility for her actions.

There/Their/They're

- There can be an adverb, a noun, a pronoun, an adjective, or an interjection used in reference to a particular place.
Examples:
She is over there.
That man there.
There is no way out.
There! I did it.
- Their is the possessive form of the pronoun they and usually comes before a noun.
Examples:
Their house is huge.
Citizens have their rights.
- They're is a contraction of they and are.
Examples:
I can't find my socks; they're missing.
Steve and Krissy said that they're hosting a dinner party.

Your/You're

- Your is the possessive form of the pronoun you.

Examples:

I like your new haircut.

What is your favorite song?

- You're is a contraction of you and are.

Examples:

You're a great student.

I heard that you're a Giants fan.

Then/Than

- Then is most often used as an adverb with reference to time or sequence; however, it can also be an adjective or a noun.

Examples:

I was thinner back then.

The dog sat and then rolled over.

If you practice, then you will improve.

- Than is used most often after a comparative adjective or adverb to introduce the second element in a comparison.

Examples:

She is a better student than her sister.

He is taller than his father.

I would rather do dishes than vacuum.

- Than is used to denote difference or choice, often combined with other, else, or anywhere.

Examples:

Although I wasn't feeling well, I had no choice other than to go to work.

There is no other restaurant you will find such variety than there.

There is nowhere I would rather work than the Writing Center.

Lose/Loose

- Lose is the present tense of a verb meaning "to come to be without" and has the connotation that the lost object will be impossible or very difficult to recover.

Examples:

Did you lose your keys, or did you misplace them?

Try not to lose your temper.

I hope you do not lose your enthusiasm for writing.

- Loose is most often used as an adjective to describe something that is not tightly attached or restrained, but it may also be used as a verb meaning "to let loose."

Examples:

My niece has a loose tooth.

His pants were so loose that they fell down.

Loose the ropes of the catamaran so we can set sail.

Its/It's

- Its is a possessive pronoun indicating that something possesses something else. It does NOT require an apostrophe. Think of it in terms of other possessive pronouns that do not carry apostrophes (e.g., his, hers, theirs, yours).

Examples:

The dog lost its bone.

The conference had its ups and downs.

The club lost its charter.

- It's is a contraction meaning “it is.” Think of it in terms of other contractions (e.g., can't, won't, isn't). The apostrophe takes the place of the second “i” so that “it is” becomes “it's.” Think of it's as an equation: (it + is) – i = it's.

Examples:

“It's not unusual to be loved by anyone.” ~Tom Jones

It's raining outside.

I would love to go dancing all night, but it's finals week.

Fewer/Less

- Fewer can be used as an adjective meaning “of a smaller number” or as a pronoun meaning “a smaller number” when used with a plural noun. Fewer is used as an adjective to describe nouns that can be counted (e.g., shoes, items, dogs, people, dollars)

Examples:

The express lane is for customers purchasing 15 items or fewer.

Fewer than 12 people attended the workshop.

- Less is most often used as an adjective meaning “smaller in size, amount, degree, etc.” Less is used with non-countable nouns (e.g., love, air, food, money). It can also be a noun meaning “something inferior or not as important” or an adverb meaning “in any way different.”

Examples:

I wish there was less hatred in this world.

Employees have been fired for less.

She is nothing less than a genius.

Common Word Choice Errors

- Irregardless: Irregardless is NOT a word! The correct word is “regardless,” meaning “without regard.” The prefix “ir” means “not,” so irregardless is its own double negative.

- A lot: A lot is two words! Thanks to the magic of spellcheck, alot is not very common anymore, but watch for it in your handwritten work.
- Alright: Like “a lot,” all right is two words.

Activity

Choose the correct word in the following sentences.

1. The lecture today had a profound effect/affect on me.
2. I like all vegetables accept/except broccoli.
3. I talked to Danny and Amanda, and they're/their coming over at 6:00.
4. Your/You're funny!
5. Tonight, I'd rather have sushi then/than pasta.
6. I wish I didn't loose/lose my temper so easily.
7. The book had it's/its ups and downs. Overall, its/it's a good read.
8. I did not do well on the test. Irregardless/Regardless, my GPA is still good.
9. I have written alot/a lot of papers this semester.
10. Is it alright/all right if I borrow your pencil?

Answer Key for Activity

1. effect
2. except
3. they're
4. You're
5. than
6. lose
7. its; it's
8. regardless
9. a lot
10. all right

References

"Commonly Misused Words and Phrases." Commonly Misused Words and Phrases. Weber State University, n.d. Web. 09 June 2014.