Inside one of your Canvas course click on the Writer's Help link.

If Writer's Help doesn't open chances are that a pop-up blocker is preventing it. In Firefox a pop-up blocker is indicated by a yellow banner across the top of the screen.

A yellow banner indicates a pop-up blocker

1. Click on “Options”
2. Click “Allow pop-ups” (please note the web address that appears will be different than what is in this screenshot)
3. Proceed to next slide

After allowing pop-ups the screen to the left will likely open in a new tab. Please close the tab and return to Canvas – proceed to the next slide for final instructions.

The screenshot displays the Macmillan Writer's Help 2.0 interface. At the top, the header includes the logo, user name 'Paul Stillitano', and a 'Help' dropdown. Below the header is a navigation bar with links for Home, Assignments, Gradebook, Instructor Console, Resources, and Preview as Student. A search bar is located on the left side of the page. The main content area features a red banner with the text 'San Jose State Writer's Help 2015/16 (Do Not Edit or Delete)'. Below this banner, the page title '15 Preparing for a Research Project' is displayed, along with a 'Notes' button and navigation arrows. The central image shows a smartphone displaying a map and a slice of pie on a plate. A large yellow and green graphic contains the number '15' and the title 'Preparing for a Research Project'. The text below the graphic reads: 'Your employer asks you to recommend the best software for a particular project. You want to plan a spring break trip to the beach. Your instructor assigns a term paper about a jazz musician. Each of these situations calls for research, for examining various kinds of sources. Preparing to begin your research means taking a long look at what you already know, the best way to proceed, and the amount of time you have to find out what you need to know. For success in college and beyond, you need to understand how to start the process of academic research.'

15 Preparing for a Research Project

Notes

15 Preparing for a Research Project

Your employer asks you to recommend the best software for a particular project. You want to plan a spring break trip to the beach. Your instructor assigns a term paper about a jazz musician. Each of these situations calls for research, for examining various kinds of sources. Preparing to begin your research means taking a long look at what you already know, the best way to proceed, and the amount of time you have to find out what you need to know. For success in college and beyond, you need to understand how to start the process of academic research.
