When he was appointed Director of the FBI in 1924, Hoover set out to “clean house” and build a new image for the agency. During his 48 years as Director of the FBI, Hoover turned the FBI into an elite law enforcement agency, establishing rigorous qualifications for FBI agents, improving agent standards, and creating the FBI National Academy.

Under Hoover’s leadership, the FBI developed a vast fingerprint file, a crime laboratory, and the Uniform Crime Reporting system. FBI agents developed a reputation as fearless law enforcers and the FBI today is considered one of the world’s premier security and crime fighting forces.

Simpson & Silva Memorial Scholarship

Friends, fellow officers, and family members created this scholarship to honor the courage and preserve the memories of San José Police Officers Gene Simpson and Gordon Silva

AWARD: Up to $2000

Scholarship for an undergraduate student majoring in Justice Studies or Forensic Science

Eligibility Requirements

- ❖ Justice Studies or Forensic Science Major
- ❖ A minimum 2.75 GPA
- ❖ Planning to pursue a career in law enforcement

The Worst Day in the San José Police Department History

San José Police Officers Officer Gene Simpson and Gordon Silva were killed in action while attempting to preserve the peace. On January 20, 1989, in what has been called the “worst day in the department’s history”, they responded to a routine disturbance call in downtown San Jose, but that “routine call” turned deadly.

The call was about an individual who had been aggressively harassing customers at a local coffee shop for money. Officer Simpson responded and made contact with the individual, who attacked Officer Simpson, got his gun and shot him. Rather than run, Officer Simpson called for backup notifying responding units that he was unarmed and the suspect had his gun. Officer Silva was the first officer to respond and was also shot. Both Officers Simpson and Silva were killed.

At their memorial service, fellow officers said that Simpson and Silva would insist that, “We chose the profession. We knew the danger. We were aware of the possibilities. We knew and we wouldn't trade it. Stand up. Stand tall. Be proud of the uniform. We are family. And even though we are gone, don't let us down. Stand fast.”

California Association of Criminalists (CAC)
Reed and Virginia McLaughlin
Endowment Scholarship

AWARD: Between $2,000 and $3,000

To support the education, training, and research of forensic science students in the areas of forensic biology, chemistry and digital forensics.

The A. Reed and Virginia McLaughlin Endowment Scholarship is kindly provided by the California Association of Criminalists. Sergeant Alfred 'Reed' McLaughlin was a latent print specialist with LAPD in the 1950's. He and his wife, Virginia, left an endowment to the California Association of Criminalists to fund CAC-sponsored research and training. This endowment also funds the Edward F. Rhodes Award.

The endowment was funded initially upon the passing of Reed McLaughlin and was later nearly doubled upon the passing of Virginia. Like many crime scene investigators of his era, Reed used benzidine in his work to detect minute quantities of blood. Sergeant McLaughlin died of cancer that was linked to using benzidine with bare hands.

These scholarships are specifically intended for the purpose of funding student research and training. The funds may be used for travel, lodging, attendance, and registration at forensic science meetings and to offset costs incurred for research and presentation of results at a CAC meeting.

Eligibility Requirements:

Applicants must:

- ❖ be either undergraduates in Forensic Science program, with concentration in Biology, Chemistry or Digital Evidence or postgraduates in other SJSU programs supervised by one of the forensic science faculty on a relevant research project.
- ❖ be student members of or applicants to the California Association of Criminalists and be an applicant to or member of the Forensic Science Student Group.
- ❖ have completed at least 60 credit hours in the major (for the undergraduates), attained a 3.0 GPA overall, and a 3.0 GPA in the respective major and be starting a research project, supervised by one of the forensic science faculty.

The applications are due March 5, 2022 by 5pm
