This course is a rigorous but enjoyable exploration of issues in the philosophy of law. We'll take an in depth look at topics such as:

- Who (or what) should the law recognize as a person?
- What should the limits to our freedom of expression be?
- When do people fail to be legally responsible for their actions?
- What role, if any, should the law play in the just distribution of goods in society?

Course materials will be available online. They'll include philosophical and legal texts, literature, and other media.

Assessment in the class will be based on discussion, presentations, and written work.

Prerequisites: 3 units of philosophy and upper division standing
