

In the last 30 years, SJSU has become my home. My mother-in-law, husband, son-in-law, and youngest daughter are all alumni and my anthropological and behavioral science alumni have influenced the cultures of Silicon Valley to become more innovative and ethical. SJSU supported my experimentation in high-impact learning that allowed me to blend research and teaching to the benefit of both. I have been able to build a career here that could have happened nowhere else. — Jan English-Lueck

A former colleague once said you can love an institution, but don't expect institution to love you back. And in some ways that's been true. What I love about SJSU, aside from a number of inspiring, generous, engaged and exciting colleagues, are OUR students. What makes me joyous when I think about teaching are my students. Diverse and rich in stories, humanity, and profound kindness, they are unique and magnificent. Every one. And after 30 years, they are truly the thing I cannot give up! May I continue to be inspired by each and every student and by the lessons our engagement brings. And that is why I love SJSU. — Amy Glazer

SJSU has such a fascinating mix of people and such variety in people's focus and interests that I am constantly discovering new things here. I've been fortunate to be part of the Linguistics & Language Development Department since its inception. LLD has been a tremendously supportive department, and I am incredibly grateful for the amazing colleagues I have always had here and the true friendships I have developed over the years. — Kaye Sanders

I love SJSU for its people -- students, staff, and faculty. I have developed deep and lifelong relationships with them. I am thankful that SJSU chose me 30+ years ago. – Emily Wughalter
