Understanding and Overcoming

Implicit Bias

in Higher Education and the Workplace

While most people in the United States sincerely reject prejudice and discrimination, many of us exhibit patterns of unwitting bias in our thoughts, feelings, and actions—and displays of explicit intergroup hostility and division are increasingly visible as well. This interactive session will explore the social, cultural, and psychological origins of intergroup biases, and the most problematic effects such biases can have in higher education and the workplace. We will also explore strategies that individuals and institutions of higher learning can employ to combat prejudice, stereotyping, and discrimination.

About Alex Madva

This webcast will be recorded and available later for viewing

Alex Madva is Assistant Professor of Philosophy and Director of the California Center for Ethics and Policy at Cal Poly Pomona. He received his BA in Philosophy and English at Tufts University and his MA and PhD from Columbia University, and previously held positions as a Mellon Postdoctoral Fellow at UC-Berkeley (2012-2014) and a Visiting Assistant Professor at Vassar College (2014-2015). His research and teaching explore how developments in social psychology inform philosophy of mind, philosophy of race and feminism, and applied ethics, especially prejudice, discrimination, and implicit bias. He has run numerous workshops and training sessions on bias, stereotype threat, and impostor syndrome for schools, courts, and wider audiences.
